The 1915 U.S. Invasion of Haiti: Examining a Treaty of Occupation

Jennifer Bauduy

One hundred years ago this past summer, President Woodrow Wilson ordered U.S. Marines to invade Haiti. The ensuing occupation lasted 19 years.

The United States had had a rocky relationship with Haiti ever since the former slave colony revolted against France and won independence in 1804, the only nation founded by a slave rebellion. Initially, the United States refused to recognize the new nation, and Southern slaveholders, fearing a similar rebellion, pushed for a trade embargo. However, by the turn of the twentieth century, America had replaced France as Haiti’s chief trading partner, and American interests, specifically in agriculture and infrastructure, increased significantly. These powerful business interests drove U.S. policy and ultimately forced the invasion.

A struggling economic situation and political uprisings, sometimes fueled by foreign governments (British, German, or French), had created continuous instability in Haiti. Additionally, Haiti had taken out costly loans from many countries, which sent the country spiraling further into debt. Two especially significant loans were from French banks—one to pay back an indemnity France had demanded for loss of land and slaves after the colony broke free, and a second loan to pay back the excessive commissions of the first. In 1914–15, 80 percent of Haiti’s government revenue was spent on debt service. Although Haiti continued to pay its debts, U.S. bankers used the fear of debt default to take control of the National Bank of Haiti, which served as the treasury and held the government’s funds.

Six months before the invasion, Marines had disembarked in Haiti and removed the equivalent in today’s terms of $11 million in gold from the National Bank of Haiti and transferred it to the National City Bank of New York, on the grounds that the funds might be needed to pay back U.S. bankers. The move gave the United States considerable control over the Haitian government. Business leaders pressured President Wilson to get control of Haiti’s customs houses, the main source of Haiti’s revenue. Wall Street mogul Roger L. Farnham, at the same time vice president of the National City Bank of New York, vice president of the National Bank of Haiti, and president of Haiti’s railway system, played a prominent role in pushing for the invasion. With so much financial interest and experience in the country, Farnham had become a key Wilson administration advisor on Haiti.

During the same period, World War I was raging in Europe, and German influence in Haiti had been making Wilson uneasy. German merchants had integrated into Haitian society more than their American counterparts, often marrying into Haitian families and therefore circumventing a law that forbade foreign ownership of land. Wilson feared that Germany might try to establish a military base near the Panama Canal, which the U.S. had taken over and completed in 1914. In fact, the United States had an ongoing interest in establishing its own naval base in Haiti’s northern port of Môle Saint-Nicholas (right across from Cuba’s Guantanamo Bay).

Backed by the Monroe Doctrine (established by President James Monroe in 1823)—that the United States would not tolerate Europe’s interference in the Western Hemisphere—and a Jim Crow perception that freed blacks could not govern themselves, the United States landed in Haiti on July 28, 1915, following the killing of the president, and had imposed an election within weeks. By September, the United States presented Haiti with a treaty—the Treaty Between the United States and Haiti (Articles I-XIII of which are featured on pp.246–247)—which concluded the active invasion and launched a two-decade occupation. The treaty gave the United States total power over Haiti’s financial system through the customs houses and the state treasury, authorized the U.S. to create a new Haitian military, and prohibited Haiti from selling or renting territory to another foreign power.

The State Department’s Office of the Historian offers a candid account of the 1915-1934 occupation and describes the U.S.-Haiti treaty as follows:

The articles of this agreement created the Haitian Gendarmerie, essentially a military force made up of U.S. citizens and Haitians and controlled by the U.S. Marines. The United States gained complete control over Haitian finances, and the right to intervene in Haiti whenever the U.S. government deemed necessary. The U.S. government also forced the election of a new pro-American president, Philippe Sudre Dartiguenave, by the Haitian legislature in August 1915. The selection of a president that did not represent the choice of the Haitian populace increased unrest in Haiti.9

Pockets of resistance to the U.S. occupation sprang up throughout the country, and thousands of Haitians lost their lives fighting against the Marines. Charlemagne Peralte, who had been a Haitian army commander, led the Cacos anti-occupation forces and became the most famous and admired leader. His forces posed a considerable threat to the U.S. Marines, who planned and carried out his assassination in 1919. The Marines carried Peralte's dead body through town and later tied his body to a door, stripped bare except for a loincloth, and placed it on display at a police station. His body was photographed by a Marine photographer and hundreds of copies of the picture were dropped from a plane above areas considered supportive of Cacos.10 The Marines unwittingly provided Haiti with an iconic photograph that served to cement Charlemagne Peralte's position as a great martyr in Haitian history.

The invasion of Haiti was one of a series of U.S. interventions in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century that were spurred by American business interests, specifically of the United Fruit Company, which had heavy investments in the production of bananas, tobacco, and sugar. The United States seized Cuba and Puerto Rico from Spain in 1898, and in the next decades intervened in Panama, Honduras, Nicaragua, Mexico, and the Dominican Republic.

The Monroe Doctrine, which had established for the United States the Western Hemisphere as its domain, had been further strengthened in 1904 by President Theodore Roosevelt's "Big Stick" policy.

By the mid-1800s, Monroe's declaration, combined with ideas of Manifest Destiny, provided precedent and support for U.S. expansion on the American continent. The doctrine's greatest extension came with Theodore Roosevelt's Corollary, which inverted the original meaning of the doctrine and came to justify unilateral U.S. intervention in Latin America.11

In 1933, Franklin D. Roosevelt tried to bring an end to this period of American militarism with his Good Neighbor

continued on page 248
The highlights in the left column and the annotations in the right column of each page of the document have been added to enhance class discussion. The complete document, Treaty Between the United States and Haiti: Finances, Economic Development and Tranquility of Haiti, which is in English and French, can be accessed at https://archive.org/details/treatywithhaiti00pomegoog or search “Treaty with Haiti” at https://archive.org/.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Article I</th>
<th>Article II</th>
<th>Article III</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Government of the United States will, by its good offices, aid the Haitian Government in the proper and efficient development of its agricultural, mineral and commercial resources and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a firm and solid basis.</td>
<td>The President of the Haitian shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of the United States, a General Receiver and such aids as may be necessary, who shall collect, receive and dispose of all customs duties on imports and exports accruing at the several customs houses and ports of entry of the Republic of Haiti.</td>
<td>The Government of the Republic of Haiti will provide by law or appropriate decrees for the payment of all customs duties to the General Receiver, and will extend to the Receiver, and to the Financial Adviser, all needful aid and full protection in the execution of the powers, rights and duties imposed herein; and the United States on its part will extend like aid and protection.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The U.S. president (not the Haitian president) names the General Receiver... who “receives” the money generated by exports and imports.</td>
<td>The U.S. president names the Financial Adviser... who will manage Haiti’s economy and by extension relations with other governments.</td>
<td>Article IV</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>What “aid” and “protection” might the General Receiver need?</td>
<td>Why might the United States need to be involved in such aid and protection?</td>
<td>European nations had extracted wealth from Haiti for centuries. What debt did Haiti owe? To whom?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>What “aid” and “protection” might the General Receiver need?</td>
<td>Why might the United States need to be involved in such aid and protection?</td>
<td>European nations had extracted wealth from Haiti for centuries. What debt did Haiti owe? To whom?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>When wealth is at hand, are Haitian citizens first in line to receive the benefits? Second? Third?</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a Treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Haiti having for its objects the strengthening of the amity existing between the two countries, the remedying of the present condition of the revenues and finances of Haiti, the maintenance of the tranquility of that Republic, and the carrying out of plans for its economic development and prosperity, was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Port-au-Prince, on the sixteenth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, the original of which Treaty, being in the English and French languages, is word for word as follows:

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI.

Preamble.

The United States and the Republic of Haiti desiring to confirm and strengthen the amity existing between them by the most cordial cooperation in measures for their common advantage;

And the Republic of Haiti desiring to remedy the present condition of its revenues and finances, to maintain the tranquility of the Republic, to carry out plans for the economic development and prosperity of the Republic and its people;

And the United States being in full sympathy with all of these aims and objects and desiring to contribute in all proper ways to their accomplishment;

The United States and the Republic of Haiti have resolved to conclude a Convention with those objects in view, and have appointed for that purpose:

The President of the United States, Robert Beale Davis,

Le Président des États-Unis, Monseur Robert Beale Davis,

Jr., Chargé d’Affaires des États-Unis,

Et le Président de la République d’Haiti, Monseur Louis Borno, Secretary for State and Public Instruction, who, having exhibited to each other their respective powers, which are seen in full and good form and true, have agreed as follows:

Article I

The Government of the United States will, by its good offices, aid the Haitian Government in the proper and efficient development of its agricultural, mineral and commercial resources and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a firm and solid basis.

Article II

The President of Haiti shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of the United States, a General Receiver and such aids as may be necessary, who shall collect, receive and dispose of all customs duties on imports and exports accruing at the several customs houses and ports of entry of the Republic of Haiti.

Article III

The Government of the Republic of Haiti will provide by law or appropriate decrees for the payment of all customs duties to the General Receiver, and will extend to the Receiver, and to the Financial Adviser, all needful aid and full protection in the execution of the powers, rights and duties imposed herein; and the United States on its part will extend like aid and protection.

European nations had extracted wealth from Haiti for centuries. What debt did Haiti owe? To whom?

When wealth is at hand, are Haitian citizens first in line to receive the benefits? Second? Third?
The "constabulary" is an army of Haitians who are trained, armed, and commanded by the U.S. Marines.

Five percent may not sound like a lot, but it represents a huge tax on Haiti by a foreign power (the U.S.). Maintaining the constabulary will also cost Haitians, above and beyond the five percent.

Haiti will not control its own finances or foreign relations on financial matters.

Article X

In this case, "revenues" means "taxes." How are the citizens of Haiti represented in this process? What power do they have?

Is the United States establishing a colonial army?

Article XI

The Haitian Government agrees to execute the United States protocol for the settlement, by arbitration or otherwise, of all pending pecuniary claims of foreign corporations, companies, citizens or subjects against Haiti.

Is this treaty helping to establish democracy in Haiti?
Policy, stating, “The definite policy of the United States from now on is one opposed to armed intervention.”

Uprisings and strikes in Haiti, combined with the proclaimed new ideology to respect the rights of others, precipitated there was no longer a threat of European dominance over Haiti’s economy, and structures had been well established to guarantee U.S. hegemony in Haiti for the foreseeable future.12

Notes

In the Classroom: Analyzing the U.S.-Haiti Treaty of 1915

Briefly review and establish the context with the class of the Monroe Doctrine and (Theodore) Roosevelt’s Corollary, which validated U.S. intervention in Latin America in the early twentieth century. Discuss the unfolding circumstances of the U.S. invasion of Haiti 100 years ago, possibly projecting the timeline on a white board. Once the historical context and circumstances have been established, distribute copies of the Treaty Between the United States and Haiti of 1915 (Handout) to launch classroom discussion.

Synopsis of the Treaty
- Articles I-IX give the United States complete control of Haiti’s finances through the customs houses and the state treasury.
- Article X authorizes the United States to create a new military (constabulary) to replace Haiti’s existing army.
- Article XI prohibits Haiti from selling or renting territory to another foreign power or entering into any contract with any foreign power that might “impair” the independence of Haiti.
- Article XIV (not featured in the Handout) states “…the United States will lend an efficient aid for the preservation of Haitian Independence and the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty.”

The complete treaty can be accessed at https://archive.org/details/treatywithhaiti00pomegoog.

From Independence to Occupation
- 1804—Haiti wins independence from France after a revolt that began in 1791. President Thomas Jefferson refuses to recognize Haiti.
- 1806—The United States places a trade embargo against Haiti.
- 1862—During the U.S. Civil War, the United States grants Haiti recognition.
- December 1914—U.S. Marines land in Haiti, remove the equivalent of $11 million of Haitian government funds from Banque Nationale d’Haiti, and transfer it to National City Bank of New York, on the grounds that it might be needed to pay debts to U.S. bankers.
- August 1915—The United States forces Haiti’s president to dissolve the legislature. The Haitian legislature rejects the new constitution. The United States forces Haiti’s president to dissolve the legislature.
- September 3, 1915—U.S. Admiral William Caperton declares martial law in Haiti, which remains in effect until 1929.
- September 16, 1915—Haiti signs a treaty presented by the United States.
- November 1915—Two government ministers resign in protest.
- May 3, 1916—The treaty is formally ratified in Washington.
- 1917—The Wilson administration pushes for a new Haitian constitution that allows foreigners to buy land (outlawed since independence from France). The Haitian legislature rejects the new constitution. The United States forces Haiti’s president to dissolve the legislature.
- 1917—Haiti’s new military, led by U.S. Marines, uses forced labor (corvée) to build roads, fueling anti-occupation resistance.
- 1918—The new Haitian constitution is approved.
- October 1919—U.S. Marines William Button and Herman Hanneken assassinate resistance leader Charlemagne Péralte.
- 1929—Strikes and protests against U.S. occupation increase in Haiti.
- December 1929—Marines fire on a crowd of 1,500 demonstrating in the town of Les Cayes, killing 12 and wounding 23.
- March 4, 1933—In his inaugural address, President Franklin D. Roosevelt declares his Good Neighbor Policy.
- August 15, 1934—American troops withdraw, leaving the Haitian Armed Forces, created and trained by U.S. Marines, in charge of Haiti.
5. Dubois, 207.
6. Message of President James Monroe at the Commencement of the First Session of the 18th Congress (The Monroe Doctrine), 12/02/1823; Presidential Messages of the 18th Congress, ca. 12/02/1823-ca. 03/03/1825; Record Group 46; Records of the United States Senate, 1789–1990; National Archives, www.ourdocuments.gov.
8. The full text of the Treaty between the United States and Haiti, signed at Port-au-Prince, September 16, 1915, can be accessed at https://archive.org/details/treatywithhaiti00pomegoog.
10. Dubois, 261.
13. Alex Dupuy, Haiti in the World Economy: Class, Race, and Underdevelopment Since 1700 (Boulder, Co.: Westview Press, 1989), 140–141

Other Primary Sources

Jennifer Bauduy is senior editor of Social Education. She can be reached at jbauduy@ncss.org.
She would like to thank Steven S. Lapham, NCSS editor, for his contribution to the classroom handout.

TEACHING AND LEARNING ABOUT THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

Earn your master’s degree or just take a few courses.

- For K-12 teachers and other interested individuals
- Undergraduate and graduate online courses
- Prepare students for the Common Core State Standards in English Language Arts & Literacy in Social Studies
- Teach the National Standards for Civics and Government
- Learn core political ideas and how to teach them

Online coursework!

VISIT global.k-state.edu/education/curriculum-and-instruction/teaching-civics-and-government

History of Medicine Online Program

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE HISTORY OF MEDICINE OF THE JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MEDICINE has long been committed to making the histories of health, healing, the biomedical sciences, and public health accessible to a wide variety of audiences. We are now excited to extend that mission beyond our Baltimore Campus.

The Department has launched a suite of new graduate-level online courses. Students may take individual courses or pursue a Certificate or Master’s degree in the History of Medicine. Online students can work from anywhere on their own computers and mobile devices. Classes are small and discussion-based including live online sessions, and are taught on the quarter system (8 weeks per course). Registration for Term 2, Fall 2015 is currently open.

Future course offerings include:
- Introduction to the History of Medicine
- Health and Healing in the Ancient World
- Medicine from the Black Death to the Scientific Revolution
- Science and the Practice of Medicine
- Biomedicine and its Consequences
- History of Public Health
- History of Global Health

For more information: www.hopkinshistoryofmedicine.org/online