The plan for our 30 minutes together:
• A (very) brief re-enactment of the Berlin Conference
• A perusal of the mock-Berlin Conference materials – differentiated lesson plans to help your students participate in a mock-Berlin Conference (with source material)
• A description of the anti-colonial advocates and their primary source material
• Teaching tips: What to do before and after the mock conference/rebuttal
Before the Berlin Conference

- Introductory lecture on the Berlin Conference, the Suez Canal, and European motives for imperialism. The PowerPoint slides that I use to introduce imperialism and the Berlin Conference can be found on the conference website.
- Give students some background information about why Europeans wanted to colonize Africa. (See attached reading)
- Define “imperialism” with political cartoon and quotes (see attached worksheet)

After the Berlin Conference and Anti-colonist rebuttal

- US-Puerto Rico relations are a great modern-day connection. I highly recommend checking out the book PUERTO RICO STRONG: A Comics Anthology. There are tons of 3-6-page comics highlighting different experiences regarding US colonialism.

- Check out the CHOICES curriculum on Colonization and Independence in Africa. https://www.choices.edu/curriculum-unit/colonization-independence-africa/ The curriculum is $30 and includes student readings on colonization and African independence movements. The curriculum includes four case studies (Ghana, Congo, Algeria, Kenya) examining specific issues regarding African independence. Each case study features a few primary source materials (often a paragraph from a speech) from both the European and Africa viewpoints.

- I have my students write an essay about the effects of French colonialism and forced assimilation in Algeria using CHOICES curriculum. An essay planning guide with a suggested outline and rubric are attached.
The 19th century in Europe was a time of industrialization. Factories in Europe required raw materials to be manufactured into marketable products. As a result, Europeans sought both a source of raw materials, as well as, a market for manufactured goods in Africa. This economic motivation played a large role in the colonization of Africa.

Politics in Europe also led to the colonization of Africa. Nationalism—a strong of identification with and pride in one’s nation—resulted in competition between European nations. This competition often resulted in wars between nations. Competition over colonial expansion in Africa was another way that national competition between European nations was demonstrated in the late 19th century. One of the causes of the Scramble for Africa, (1885-1910) which resulted in the colonization of all of Africa in just twenty-five years, was the competition between European nations. No major nation wanted to be without colonies. The competition was particularly strong between Britain, France, and Germany, the strongest European nation-states in the late 19th century.

In addition, ideologies of racial hierarchy were prevalent in Europe in the 19th century. Many Europeans viewed themselves as the most advanced civilization in the world, and some saw it as their mission to "enlighten" and "civilize" people in the rest of the world. Many inaccurate and racialized stereotypes of African peoples, which existed at the time, were used to justify colonialism in Africa.

The colonization of Africa coincided with the expansion of Christian missionary activity in Africa. You will remember from the last module that parts of Africa, such as Ethiopia and Egypt, were home to Christians right from the beginning of Christianity as a region. However, Christianity was introduced to the rest of Africa only in the modern era. Christian missionary activity began in earnest in the 19th century during the same period of time that European countries were becoming more engaged in Africa. Historians do not all agree on what the relationship was between Christian missionary activity and colonialism. However, evidence suggests that while many missionaries opposed the harsher aspects of colonialism, they were supportive of the colonization of African countries. Missionaries who supported colonialism believed that European control would provide a political environment that would facilitate missionary activity in Africa. This support for colonialism played an important role in legitimizing the colonial endeavor among the citizens of the colonizing powers in Europe.
European nations were able to make certain areas of Africa into their colonies in two main ways. Some African leaders were willing to sign treaties with Europeans for various reasons. In some cases, they saw it to their benefit to gain European allies. In other cases, there was not a clear understanding of what the treaties were about or what the consequences of them would be. Secondly, military force was used in some cases when there was a large amount of resistance to colonial rule.

The Treaty of Berlin and the "Scramble for Africa": All of this treaty making and territory claiming by European nations caused a competitive rush for territory in Africa. This period is sometimes referred to as the "Scramble for Africa." As a result, Chancellor Otto von Bismarck of Germany initiated a conference in 1884 for European nations to regulate the rush for territory. The conference served several main purposes. First, European nations were interested in being assured access to various important trade routes, particularly along the Niger and Congo river basins. Secondly, there was a concern to suppress the internal slave trade that was still going on in some parts of Africa. Thirdly, a ban was put on importing firearms into Africa, which resulted in Europeans having a monopoly on guns in Africa. And finally, occupation of territories in Africa was discussed. The result of this conference was a treaty called the Treaty of Berlin. By 1900, almost 90% of Africa was under European control.

Colonialism Brings New Borders for Africa It is important to realize how borders have shifted as a result of colonialism. The borders of African countries today were imposed from the outside by European nations. Often the people who drew these borders paid no attention to pre-existing groups or existing political organization at the time of colonialization. Sometimes they grouped together people who had never been united under the same government before. Sometimes they group enemies together. Sometimes they divided families or tribes into two separate countries.
Imperialism
